PHOTOS

Last week we had the end of semester festival in ISAC. After a very fruitful semester the students got it as a task to create a festival. This festival is the first end of semester in the school. Since we have designers, artists and students in cultural management in the school this was a perfect project for them. Teamwork, collaboration, brainstorming about what to do and how best to represent the new institute and maybe create a tradition for the future. It so happens that on the date 26th September last year there was the first announcement of the school in black on white in the press. Therefore we ran a black and white theme, that is very appropriate here and can really be taken to any dimension.

The festival included song (composed song about the school by the students), dance (always necessary in Mozambique), fashion show, exhibition of the work produced during the semester and many other smaller festivities. There were speeches, a declaration from the students and grand buffet lunch in the campus garden.

My eyes almost watered, this has been one of my prouder moments, even this is a small school with little resources we have managed to create an academic atmosphere and great optimism for the future. I am humbled by being allowed to participate in this.

I hope people are able to access some of the photos here
